

Anjali Reddy

002

From:
Sent:
To:
Subject:

Egyptian Press and Information Office [100facts@modernegypt.info]
Thursday, December 16, 2010 2:12 PM
Egypt
Egypt's new museum for antiquities will be built by fall 2012.

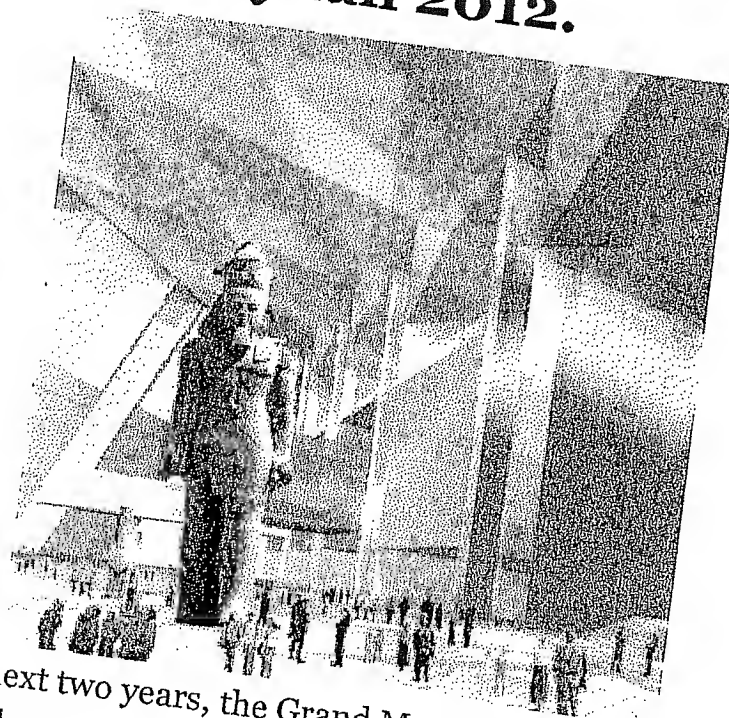

Follow Up Flag:
Flag Status:

Follow up
Completed

*You're receiving this newsletter because you are on the mailing list of the Embassy of Egypt.
Having trouble reading this email? View it in your browser.*

100 Facts About Egypt N° 88

Egypt's new museum for antiquities will be built by fall 2012.

- Over the next two years, the Grand Museum of Egypt – set on a 120-acre complex with its own fire station, power plant and conservation

Egypt E-Alert

Bloomberg

Egypt Targets Foreign Investment of $15 Billion
December 15, 2010

Egypt aims to double annual foreign investment to $15 billion within the next "couple of years" as it opens up its economy to private participation, Trade and Industry Minister Rachid Mohamed Rachid said.

"We know that this depends on many factors that we don't control," Rachid said in an interview in Cairo yesterday. "But there is one factor that we are trying to push more than anything else. We want to open up more sectors for investment; in that respect the private-public partnerships and the infrastructure projects are very critical."

Egypt, which expects to see its GDP grow by 6 percent in 2011, plans to increase its annual infrastructure budget to $17.25 billion over the next five years, Finance Minister Youssef Boutros Ghali said earlier this week. The government is looking for "new funding channels" to back the spending program, which will feature public-private partnerships, he said.

To read the full article, please click here.

For more information, please contact Anjali Reddy at 202-777-3508 or areddy@clsdc.com.

This material is distributed by Chiapok, Leonord, Schechter & Associates on behalf of the Egyptian Press and Information Office. Additional information is available at the Department of Justice, Washington, DC.